Assignments and Grading:

I. 60% of the final grade will result from two written projects:

1. a mid-term exam, given on Tuesday, 15 October and Thursday, 17 October
2. a final exam, given on Monday, 3 December and a date TBA

II. 40% of the final grade will result from the following:

1. class participation (quality as well as quantity)
2. brief, short-answer daily quizzes on reading assignments and films (lowest 20% dropped)
3. one oral presentation (counts as five quiz grades which cannot be dropped)

Note 1: You must score at least 90 on one of the two written exams to get an A or A- in the course.

Note 2: Classroom work determines 40% of the final grade. If you do not like to attend class, do regular reading assignments, and have participation required of you, you should either not take this class or settle for a grade lower than your written work might otherwise warrant.

Note 3: I will give the daily reading quiz at the beginning of class. If you come late to class, you will miss it.

Note 4: A few protocols: no hats, laptops, or cellphones in class. Please do not start packing up your belongings until the class session has finished.

III. Attendance:

You are allowed two unexcused absences. Each additional absence on a Tuesday will subtract 4 points from your final course grade; a Thursday absence will cost 7 points. If you arrive significantly late or leave after the break on Thursday, you will lose 3 points.

In the sixteenth century, an Italian named Giulio Camillo constructed an object that became the talk of Western Europe. He called his work "The Memory Theater," and he took it on tours of Venice and Paris, where he announced that he would reveal his building's secret to only one person, the King of France, and only in a book, which he promised. Camillo, however, never completed the book, leaving behind only his theater, a wooden model, large enough to admit at least two people at once.

Camillo's theater was, in fact, another version of a memory system, first described by the Roman writer Cicero, a mnemonic technique that links ideas or topics to specific places or objects. Cicero's account connects this technique's origins to treachery and catastrophe: invited by a nobleman to recite at a banquet, a poet named Simonides, having completed his oration, was told by his host that he would receive only half the agreed-upon payment for his work. A few minutes later, a message arrived for Simonides: two men were waiting outside to see him. He left the table and went out, but found no one. In his absence, the roof of the banquet hall collapsed, crushing the host and the remaining guests, so mangling the corpses as to leave them unidentifiable, even by relatives. Simonides, however, remembering the places where the guests had been sitting, was able to indicate to the mourners which were their dead. In Cicero's words:

He inferred that persons desiring to train this faculty (of memory) must select places and form mental images of the things they wished to remember and store those images in the places, so that the order of the places will preserve the order of the things, and the images of the things will denote the things themselves, and we shall employ the places and images respectively as a wax writing-tablet and the letters written on it.

This course asks you to use the movie Casablanca as a memory theater for storing and recalling (1) the events of the 1930s, especially the two that will concern us – the consolidation of the Hollywood studio system and the rise of German fascism; and (2) the course of post-War cinematic history, especially American film noir, Italian neorealism, and the French New Wave.

After beginning with two films with German origins, Fritz Lang's M and MGM's Grand Hotel, the course's first half will trace the parallel developments in Hollywood and Europe, using the biography and writings of Walter Benjamin as an allegory of popular culture's appeal and Naziism's danger. Part I ends with the Fall of Paris, both the historical event (which drove Benjamin further into a fatal exile) and its Hollywood representation (in Casablanca). Part II traces the two roads that diverge from that moment: the film noir of movies like In a Lonely Place and the neorealist rejection of Hollywood Cinema. These two filmmaking practices, apparently so contradictory, converge in the French New Wave, whose most famous movie, Jean-Luc Godard's Breathless, explicitly invokes the image of Humphrey Bogart, the star of Casablanca.
