COURSE DESCRIPTION

The purpose of this course is to introduce you to literature and literary forms from ancient Greece to medieval and Renaissance Europe. The course will primarily approach these texts through contemporary graphic adaptations, but we will also examine works in their original and translated forms. Our objective will be to examine and analyze the power of visual rhetoric to clarify, obfuscate, or otherwise alter writing. Consequently, we will supplement our primary readings with articles and essays that focus on how visual representation works and the ways in which we should approach it.

This course places significant emphasis on analysis, research, synthesis, and rhetorical approach. You will be expected to conduct close readings of each text, maintain a reading response journal, lead class discussions, and compose two short papers and one longer, final paper. You will also be expected to submit multiple drafts of each paper and participate in conferencing and peer review exercises.

This course can satisfy the UF General Education requirement for Composition or Humanities. For more information, see https://catalog.ufl.edu/ugrad/current/advising/info/general-educationrequirement.aspx.

This course can provide 6000 words toward fulfillment of the UF requirement for writing. For more information, see https://catalog.ufl.edu/ugrad/current/advising/info/gordon.aspx.

ASSIGNMENT DETAILS

Participation
You are expected to be an active participant in our class discussions. This means contributing to conversations in meaningful ways, voicing thoughtful opinions, asking relevant questions, offering insights, and listening to others respectfully.

Presentations
Over the course of the semester, each student will give two short presentations, one on an original text, and one on an artist who has illustrated a text. For each of these, you should prepare a brief analysis. You may choose to focus on a specific passage, a trope or theme you have identified, the author’s approach to illustration, connections between your assigned text and others, or any other topic you find interesting and relevant to the course. The presentations should open up opportunities for the rest of the class to engage with your ideas, so a good way to end them is by posing questions.

Short Writing Exercises
Throughout the semester, you will be asked to complete brief writing assignments in order to practice working with the ideas and texts we are examining. These assignments will sometimes be completed in groups, and sometimes individually. Ideally, you should use these writing exercises as jumping-off points for the arguments you want to make in your formal essays.

Papers
You will compose three essays over the course of the semester, the last of which will also require a group project component. Specific guidelines for these essays will be provided early in each unit, but the papers will largely parse a particular thread or theme from one or more of the texts we read. These assignments will be open to some interpretation, and you are encouraged to investigate the elements of our readings that you find most stirring or inspiring.

GRADING RUBRIC

Evaluation of written work will focus primarily on organization, thoughtfulness, and clarity. Specifically, I will grade based on the following: a clear and focused thesis/main argument; a well supported and logical argument; a clear expression of ideas; an engagement with the course texts and themes; and a respectful engagement with oppositional arguments.

An “A” paper states the author’s topic clearly and demonstrates a thorough familiarity with the sources. The topic must be an arguable one. The paper is a thoughtful, careful overview of the topic. An “A” paper elaborates on a range of scholarship with relevant examples. The paper is well organized and each paragraph has a clear topic sentence. The sentence structure is direct, active, and concise, with appropriate word choice. The tone and diction are formal. The paper uses effective transitions and contains few—if any—grammar or punctuation errors; the piece will have no obvious proofreading errors. The writer uses correct MLA formatting and an appropriate works cited page.

A “B” paper may not clearly state the research issues specifically in the introduction. However, the writer demonstrates a command of the sources and has a debatable topic. The writer has relevant, recent, and scholarly sources, if applicable. The works cited may be incorrect in places, but is correctly executed otherwise. The paper has a few passive, wordy sentences and some minor grammatical errors but overall demonstrates mechanical competence. The overall argument is supported and apparent, if not clearly communicated.

A “C” paper contains an organizing statement that needs clarification and more development. The writer may not adequately engage evidence from the source text and/or research. The tone and diction may be informal at times. The paper lacks effective transitions and consistently strong topic sentences. It has some grammatical and mechanical errors such as fragments and comma splices as well as some passive, wordy sentence structure.

A “D” paper does not have an arguable topic. The writer does not use significant or scholarly sources and fails to show a mastery of the sources. A “D” paper has little textual evidence. It may contain many and distracting grammar and punctuation errors. A “D” paper has style problems: repetitive, passive, and choppy sentence structure, informal language, and poor phrasing. It will give the impression of having been written quickly with little revision or proofreading.

An “F” paper does not meet the minimum assignment criteria. It may be off-topic, incomplete, or nonsensical, or it may contain significant ethical problems such as instances of plagiarism or an obviously apathetic approach.

In addition to these general standards, particular attention will be given to:

Organization

• Creative and clear thesis that posits a theory (not a fact) about the text
• Itinerary statement (how you will prove your claim/thesis)
• Topic sentences for paragraphs
• Introductory and concluding paragraphs that do not consist of redundant thoughts

Clarity

• Attention to language (use formal language choices and no “slang”
• Limited number of errors relating to grammar and punctuation
• Clear syntax (sentences structure) and lack of passive voice

POLICIES AND EXPECTATIONS

Grading

Your final grade will be weighted as follows:

• Participation 10%
• Presentations 10%
• Short Writing Exercises 10%
• Short paper #1 (1500 words) 20%
• Short paper #2 (1500 words) 20%

Absences/Tardiness
Active participation is crucial to learning in this course. You are expected to be in class and on time. Excessive absences will result in grade penalties as follows:

- 4th Absence: Loss of one letter grade for the course
- 7th Absence: Loss of two letter grades for the course
- 10th Absence: Failure of course

3 Tardies = 1 Absence

Students who participate in athletics, band, or theater will be excused for university-sponsored travel and events. However, you are responsible for making up any work you miss for participation in these events. Failure to consult me about an absence and/or how to make up work will be reported to the appropriate sponsoring department.

Retention of Graded Assignments
I will keep electronic copies of all papers and journals.

Late Work
All papers must be submitted electronically prior to the beginning of class on their respective due dates. Any paper not submitted on time will be penalized one letter grade. An additional loss of one letter grade will result from each subsequent day the paper is late.

Should you have an extenuating circumstance that prevents you from submitting a paper on the day it is due, please contact me in advance or within 24 hours of the scheduled class meeting. Documentation will be required.

Special Note Regarding Electronic Submissions
Papers must be submitted in Microsoft Word format. Any file that cannot be opened due to corruption or improper extension will be considered late. Check your files before submitting them!
